ACLEI marks International Anti-Corruption Day and celebrates 15th anniversary

Today, the Australian Commission for Law Enforcement Integrity (ACLEI) marks International Anti-Corruption Day (IAC Day), coinciding with the commission's 15th anniversary this month.

Integrity Commissioner Jaala Hinchcliffe said, "Over our 15-year history, ACLEI has been committed to preventing corruption and strengthening integrity in Australian Government law enforcement agencies. Our purpose is to make it more difficult for corruption to occur or remain undetected, and this is what International Anti-Corruption Day is all about."

This year's IAC Day theme 'Your right, your role: Say no to corruption' highlights the rights and responsibilities of everyone in tackling corruption.

The Integrity Commissioner encourages everyone to take some time to consider what integrity looks like in their job, and to think about those circumstances where their integrity might be challenged. Anticipate situations and practice the response.

"We all play an important role in preventing corruption every day. Keep asking yourself 'How will I act with integrity in this situation?' It's your right, your role – say no to corruption."
